Melissa Spitz is a working artist from St. Louis, Missouri, who currently resides in Brooklyn, New York. You Have Nothing to Worry About comprises Melissa's decade-long documentary photography project about her relationship with her mentally ill, substance-abusing mother. Photography acts as a conversation between them.

Melissa writes: "The photographs are simultaneously upsetting and encouraging; honest and theatrical; loving and hateful. By turning the camera toward my mother and my relationship with her, I capture her behavior as an echo of my own emotional response."
